

PROBLEM

Qatar ranks 73rd in EF English Proficiency Index; below UAE, Lebanon, Turkey, Nepal, South Korea, Russia.

94% of people believe critical thinking is important, and 86% believe it is lacking in public

75% of long-term job success depends on people skills, while only 25% on technical knowledge

How might we improve English proficiency, communication skills, and thinking ability of the most "vulnerable" public school students?

EXISTING SOLUTIONS

Continuously evolving school curriculum

High student teacher ratio means less time for focused work

Class time isn't enough for sufficient exposure

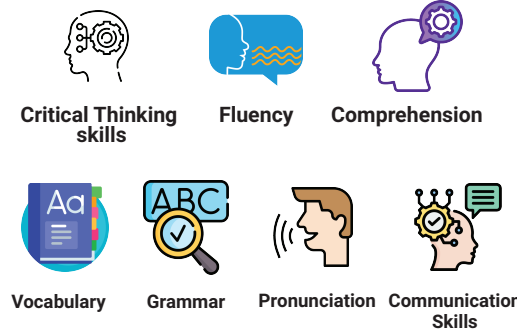

Extra-Curricular Activities (Debate Club/MUN)

Subject to self selection bias, shy/most vulnerable students are unlikely to volunteer

Competitive elements creates an incentive for schools to recruit those who are already "the best"

BUT WHY DEBATE?

Studies on EFL students show students undergoing debate education show much higher improvement across multiple fields compared to control groups
